“Glamour is the keynote in this space used for cocktails before dinner with guests,” says designer Gideon Mendelson. “Lush turquoise velvet banquettes are set in all four corners to create a lively hubbub throughout the room. The gold of the lamps and silk pillows, like good jewelry, provide accents, while a large center mirror adds to the festivities since people tend to be more animated when they can see themselves reflected.”

The open living space of this loft comprised of several seating areas (a dining room, the kitchen, and the blue-lacquered library) dictated that each be distinguished by dozens of details, which are evenly—yet never expectedly—woven throughout. “We kept the walls neutral and used the colors as accent until you get into the library, where you are surprised by this pop of color,” say the design team of Tilton Fenwick. “The library is the room that ties everything together.”
